

Brittons Croft Update (Revised)

I have been in further contact with Saxon Weald over progress at Brittons Croft. Architects are now formally instructed and are working on a detailed scheme for construction of all older persons' flats on the site. We are hopeful that we shall see this scheme by way of further consultation shortly, and Saxon Weald will also have further public consultation in early November although we are not yet sure in what format.

A member of the public helpfully suggested that there were two benches outside Brittons Croft which could be transported and used at MPF. I have now received confirmation in reply to our request that one of these seats is available (the other one having been given to one of the former occupants) and we have made arrangements for uplifting this and embedding it at MPF shortly. We have now heard there are others available and Tim Lloyd and I visited Brittons Croft to inspect these and are pleased to say they are in good condition. Thank you Saxon Weald.
